In the summer of 2020, the COVID-19 virus continues to spread rapidly within the community. Both the substantial threat to health and virus-induced fear put threats on physical health and the psychological well-being of any individuals. In the workplace, the pandemic is presenting unprecedented unique challenges to employment law and labour compliance for human resources professionals and in-house counsels. Businesses are tirelessly striving the balance between minimising any risk and support to employee's health and safety, and to maintain business continuity during the challenging period. Conflicts and disputes might arise if these are not being handled properly, causing damage to business and further affecting morale at the workplace.

In the webinar, Ms. Winnie Tsien and Mr. Henry Wong would be sharing with us, from the aspects of human resources and legal expertise, on the topics of COVID-19-related urgent arrangements for employees and potential conflicts .
